Kerry's Long List of Maybes

Campaign offers few clues as hunt for running mate begins

ORLANDO, FLA. | Nomination well in hand, Democrat John Kerry took the initial steps Wednesday toward selecting a No. 2 for his ticket, with options that include governors from the Midwest and Southwest, former campaign rivals and a larger-than-life former first lady.

Kerry remained mum about potential political partners, describing it as a private and personal process.

With 19 years in the Senate, Kerry may look outside Washington to governors such as Tom Vilsack of Iowa, Mark Warner of Virginia or Janet Napolitano of Arizona.

Kerry may also look to a former rival who has built a fund-raising network and has experience campaigning, North Carolina Sen. John Edwards, Missouri Rep. Dick Gephardt and retired Army Gen. Wesley Clark all endorsed Kerry when they exited the race and have pledged to support his campaign.

New York Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton has repeatedly said she intends to complete her term, which ends in 2006, but has not ruled out running for president in 2008 if Bush is re-elected. If Kerry is well-positioned to win the race this year, however, Clinton may find the ticket too attractive to pass up.

The Kerry campaign was vague about its timetable. The benefit of a quick decision is a partner to help in spreading the message and raising money. The disadvantage is instantly eliminating the one question mark that might keep the public captivated. NEDRA PICKLER (AP)

MARS | All Bets Are Off The announcement Tuesday that the NASA rover Opportunity found evidence that water once flowed on Mars may be exciting to scientists, but it's ending some of the action for bookies in Britain. The bookmaking firm Ladbrokes an-

LAW

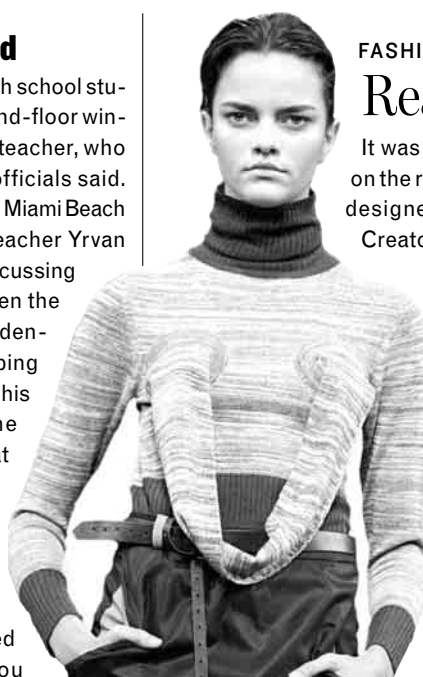

The Case of the Diligent Criminal

A Mount Carmel, Tenn., woman accused of going on a shopping spree by forging checks from a stolen pocketbook wasn't entirely fiscally irresponsible, police said. After all, they said, she wrote each transaction in the checkbook register. "I guess she wanted to make sure she didn't bounce any of the victim's checks," officer Will Mullins said. Police charged Debra Janan Goins with felony theft and burglary. She was arrested last week when an officer stopped her car and found the stolen purse, as well as several department-store shopping bags. (AP)

EDUCATION

Lessons Learned

A Miami Beach, Fla., high school student jumped out a second-floor window to win a bet with a teacher, who has been disciplined, officials said. The teen was not injured. Miami Beach High School science teacher Yrvan Tassy Jr.'s class was discussing evolution last week when the student, who was not identified, talked about jumping out the window to prove his point, police said. The teacher bet him $20 that he would be injured in the jump, according to police reports. (AP)

FASHION

Ready. Or Not

It was a scene of jarring mass trendiness on the runways of Paris Wednesday as two designers unveiled their fall collections.

CRIME

Pot by the Pound

Police who pulled over a pickup truck in Indiana because its load was blocking the view of a temporary license plate in the rear window discovered it was carrying 900 pounds of marijuana. "It was piled up in big bags," said Indiana State Trooper William Etter.

"Once you first stopped it, it was obvious — you could smell it." The marijuana was compressed into about 900 bricks and wrapped in plastic, police said. The pot nearly filled the bed of the truck, and a drug-sniffing dog responded immediately to the scent, police said. (AP)

ANIMAL WATCH

Sniffing for Cash

Keya may have been trained to sniff drugs, but the canine cop has shown her nose can also follow the smell of money. The yellow Labrador retriever led a South Dakota Highway Patrol trooper to nearly $100,000 in cash duct-taped into a spare tire as the team made a routine traffic stop along Interstate 90. The suspects told officers they had no idea where the money came from. (AP)

The House unanimously passed legislation Wednesday giving the federal commission investigating the Sept. 11 attacks more time to finish its work. Campbell Says He Won't Seek Third Term in Senate

Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell, beset by health problems and an office scandal involving a longtime aide, announced Wednesday he will not seek a third term this fall. Campbell's office was rocked last month when it was alleged that a longtime aide had been taking kickbacks. The senator reported the matter to the Senate ethics committee. (AP)

Bush's Campaign Steams Ahead

President starts fundraising, advertising blitz

LOS ANGELES | Rival John Kerry in his sights, President Bush opened a fund-raising sprint through California Wednesday and sought to win over voters by focusing on the compassionate part of what he calls his "compassionate conservative" agenda.

Renewing his push to expand religious groups' roles in helping down-and-out Americans, Bush told 1,500 government and religious leaders, "We're talking about healing our nation, we're not talking politics."

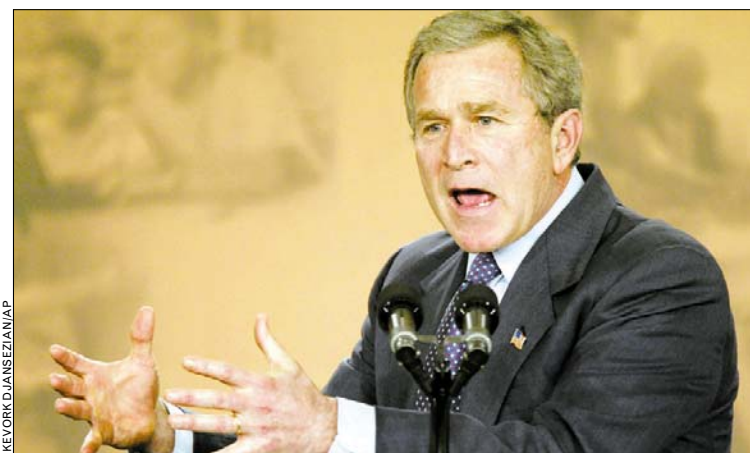

But the campaign was on full display as Bush crammed three fundraisers into a 25-hour California visit — Wednesday's events alone netting $4.1 million.

Democrats seeking the right to challenge Bush have argued for months that he has left the poor behind with tax cuts they say were skewed to the rich and corporate-friendly policies. Bush argued that he had not forgotten the "people in our society with shattered lives," and said religious groups represent a different route to tackling "those seemingly intractable problems."

Also Wednesday, the president's re-election committee rolled out its first campaign commercials, using images of the destroyed World Trade Center to claim "steady leadership in times of change."

"What sees us through tough times? Freedom, faith, families, and sacrifice," says one commercial, as clips roll of the Sept. 11, 2001, wreckage, a flag being raised, children saying the Pledge of Allegiance, parishioners at a church, parents with a new baby and firefighters.

President Bush makes his case for expanding the role of religious organizations in helping the less fortunate during a campaign stop in Los Angeles on Wednesday.

The ads portray the Republican incumbent as a steward who has led the country through three years of economic woes and terrorism fears and seek to make the case that Bush has emerged as a leader amid foreign and domestic challenges.

Feds Might Ease Gender Rules in Schools

Move could clear the way for same-sex classes, public schools

WASHINGTON | Federal officials plan to significantly loosen their restrictions on same-sex public education, giving schools the most freedom they've had to teach boys and girls separately in almost 30 years.

In changing its enforcement of Title IX, the landmark law that prohibited sex-based discrimination in schools, the Education Department says it will expand choices for parents without eroding equal opportunity. The regulations announced Wednesday reflect a push by both the Bush administration and female senators of both parties to give schools flexibility.

Since 1975, when current rules went into effect, single-sex classes have been allowed only in limited cases, such as gym classes involving contact sports. The proposed rules would broaden the options considerably, allowing school districts to launch single-sex classes to provide a diversity of choices or to meet the particular education needs of their students.

Schools would have to be "even-handed," meaning they must treat boys and girls equally in determining what courses to offer.

The department's plan would also make it easier to create entire single-sex schools.

Current rules allow those schools, but only when a district creates a single-sex school with comparable benefits for the other gender. That restriction would disappear. BEN FELLER (AP)

Ore. City Allows Gay Marriage

Portland hands out licenses as leaders in N.Y. spar over unions

PORTLAND, ORE. | Gay and lesbian couples started tying the knot in Portland on Wednesday after the county issued same-sex marriage licenses, joining the rapidly spreading national movement from San Francisco and upstate New York.

About 50 people lined up for a sudden chance to wed after a Multnomah County commissioner said she would begin issuing the licenses to same-sex couples.

Meanwhile, New York's attorney general joined the national debate, saying current law prohibits same-sex weddings but that he would leave it to the courts to decide if the law is constitutional.

"I personally would like to see the law changed, but must respect the law as it now stands," Attorney General Eliot Spitzer said in a statement obtained by The Associated Press.

Both sides of the polarizing issue have been waiting for Spitzer's opinion since Friday, when the mayor of New Paltz, a college town 75 miles north of Manhattan, married 25 same-sex couples without licenses.

Village Mayor Jason West has been charged with 19 criminal counts and could face jail time.

On Wednesday, Nyack, N.Y., Mayor John Shields said he would also start marrying gay couples and planned to seek a license himself to marry his same-sex partner.

However, Spitzer said Wednesday that New York's law contains references to "bride and groom" and "husband and wife" and does not authorize same-sex marriage.

FBI Disseminates Photos Of Child-Porn Suspects

WASHINGTON | The FBI announced a new effort Wednesday to disseminate photographs of unidentified child pornographers on television and the Internet in hopes they will be recognized.

The first two suspects arrested were identified after their photos aired recently on the "America's Most Wanted" television show. The FBI also will post images on its Web site and possibly through other TV and print media, officials said.

Stacey Bradley, a supervisory special agent in the Baltimore FBI field office, said thousands of images of unknown adults and children are found on computers, in Internet chat rooms and elsewhere during child molestation investigations.

"It's still occurring every day to our children in the United States," Bradley said at a news conference. "They're all over the Internet."

The initiative is part of the FBI's "Innocent Images" program, which is based in the Baltimore FBI office, to combat sexual exploitation of children on the Internet. Since the program began in 1995, more than 3,000 people have been arrested.

What's new about the initiative announced Wednesday is that the FBI and Justice Department are seeking "John Doe" grand jury indictments of the unidentified suspects. That has rarely been done in child exploitation cases, partly for fear that a lookalike could be mistakenly arrested. CURT ANDERSON (AP)

Lifting Luggage Dangerous for Airport Screeners

WASHINGTON | Lifting and searching all those bags is taking a toll on airport screeners, resulting in injury and illness that is the highest among federal employees.

Back strains are common. Other injuries include cuts when a screener reaches into a bag to check for sharp objects, or bumps, bruises and even broken bones after suitcases fall on feet and hands, according to a recently released federal report.

Transportation Security Administration spokesman Mark Hatfield said the agency is working to address the problem.

"We're spending hundreds of millions of dollars to improve the physical systems, the mechanical systems," Hatfield said. (AP)

Haiti's Rebels to Lay Down Weapons

Tentative end to violent rebellion that killed 130

PORT-AU-PRINCE, HAITI | With U.S. Marines starting to patrol Haiti's capital, rebel leader Guy Philippe announced that his men would lay down their arms, signaling an end to a monthlong rebellion that claimed at least 130 lives.

"Now that there are foreign troops promising to protect the Haitian people ... we will lay down our arms," Philippe told a news conference. The rebels then abandoned the former army headquarters, which they moved into upon arriving in the capital Monday.

Interim President Boniface Alexandre, making his first address to the nation since he was sworn in Sunday, asked rebels to help rebuild Haiti, the Western hemisphere's poorest nation. He also asked loyalists to exiled Haitian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide to disarm, assuring them that Aristide's Lavalas party will "play a role in the democratic process that we are starting."

Meanwhile, the 15-nation Caribbean Community called Wednesday for an independent international inquiry, possibly headed by the United Nations, into allegations by Aristide that he was forced from office Sunday by the United States, said Jamaican Prime Minister P.J. Patterson, chairman of the regional bloc. U.S. officials have denied the charges.

Aristide remained in the Central African Republic, where a U.S.-government chartered plane had taken him after he left Haiti on Sunday.

Sunnis, Shiites in Iraq Pull Together

A somber, deliberate show of unity after attacks on Shiites

BAGHDAD, IRAQ | Shiite clerics joined Sunni preachers in a march of thousands Wednesday, trying to keep sectarian passions in check after a horrific attack on Shiite pilgrims that raised fears of civil war.

U.S. and Iraqi officials disagreed over how many people died in Tuesday's bombings in Baghdad and Karbala. The Iraqi Governing Council said 271 people were killed. U.S. officials put the toll at 117.

The attacks — at some of the holiest Shiite shrines and on the most sacred day in the Shiite calendar — threatened to turn Shiites against Sunnis if the bombers were found to have been Sunni extremists.

But strife with the country's Sunni minority would hardly be in the interests of the Shiites, who stand on the verge of achieving their dream of real political power after generations of suppression. Influential Shiite clergy appeared eager to keep passions in check.

"We and our Sunni countrymen are, have been and always will be, brothers," said Shiite preacher Amer al-Hussein, a senior aide to cleric Muqtada al-Sadr, an outspoken opponent of the U.S.-led occupation. HAMZA HENDAWI (AP)

French Senate Passes Head Scarf Law

PARIS | France's parliament definitively adopted a law banning Islamic head scarves in public schools, with the Senate voting 276-20 vote in favor of the measure Wednesday.

The National Assembly passed the legislation Feb. 10 in a 494-36 vote. President Jacques Chirac must now sign the legislation into law. Chirac pressed for such a law, saying it was needed to protect the French principle of secularism.

The law forbids religious apparel and signs that "conspicuously show" a student's religious affiliation. Jewish skullcaps and large Christian crosses would also be banned. But authorities have made clear that it is aimed at removing Islamic head scarves from schools. (AP)

Israel Strikes Gaza Militants

Hunt for wanted men stepped up ahead of possible withdrawal

GAZA CITY, GAZA STRIP | Israel killed three Hamas militants in a missile attack on a car Wednesday, the second such strike in five days and a sign that Israel is intensifying its hunt for wanted men ahead of a proposed withdrawal from much of the Gaza Strip.

The helicopter gunship fired two missiles at the car, turning it into a fireball. Bystanders tried to put out the fire with sand and by beating the wreckage with jackets and scarves. One man, using a blanket, lifted a charred body out of the car and heaved it onto a stretcher.

The Israeli military said one of those killed, 24-year-old Tarad Jamal, was behind several roadside bombings and rocket attacks on Israelis.

On its Web site, Hamas indicated that the three men were about to carry out an attack. "The three martyrs were on a holy mission when the Zionist U.S.-made helicopters fired two missiles toward their vehicle," the statement said.

Palestinian medical workers retrieve a body from the car destroyed in the missile strike in Gaza City on Wednesday. Three members of Hamas were killed, witnesses said.

Wednesday's strike, near the Jewish settlement of Netzarim, came just five days after Israeli helicopters fired missiles at a car in the same area, killing three militants of the Islamic Jihad group.

There has been some expectation that Israel would step up its strikes against militants in Gaza ahead of a proposed withdrawal. Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon has said he would dismantle most Israeli settlements in the strip and impose a boundary on the Palestinians if talks on the U.S.-backed "road map" peace plan remain frozen.

The prospect of an Israeli withdrawal has also helped fuel internal Palestinian strife in Gaza, with armed gangs and corrupt members of the security forces jockeying for power. IBRAHIM BARZAK (AP)

Suspect Horrifies Belgians in Court With Testimony

ARLON, BELGIUM | To gasps of horror, a man on trial for the kidnap, rape and murder of young girls described in detail in court Wednesday how he had sex with two of the victims.

But Marc Dutroux denied killing any of them during his first day of testimony and claimed the abductions in the mid-1990s were on the orders of a child-sex network in Belgium.

Prosecutors, who reject the crime-network claims, have charged Dutroux, his ex-wife and two other people with kidnapping and raping six girls and murdering four of them.

Their trial comes almost eight years after events that shocked Belgium as much for inept police work as for the depravity of the acts of which the former electrician is accused. CONSTANT BRAND (AP)

In Zimbabwe, Condoms Carry Political Message

Stickers on prophylactic packages urge citizens to 'stand up' to Mugabe

HARARE, ZIMBABWE | Human rights activists have launched a "revolutionary condoms" campaign in Zimbabwe, using stickers on condom packages to urge people to "stand up" against President Robert Mugabe's autocratic rule.

State radio on Wednesday blamed the United States, the largest supplier of condoms to Zimbabwe, claiming the bright stickers that started appearing on condom packages in recent days are "part of U.S. government plans for regime change." U.S. officials said they had nothing to do with the campaign, however, and a secretive group calling itself Zvakwana, or "Enough is Enough," claimed responsibility.

Zimbabwe was plunged into its worst political and economic crisis since independence from Britain when the government began seizing thousands of white-owned farms for redistribution to blacks in 2000. Mugabe's government has also cracked down on dissent, arresting opposition leaders, human rights activists and journalists. (AP)

Support Weakens For Disney Chief

Shareholders register no confidence in Eisner

PHILADELPHIA | Walt Disney Co. chief Michael Eisner on Wednesday was rebuked by the stockholders as 43 percent withheld their support for him in a vote at the company's annual meeting.

The size of the no-confidence vote was larger than many had been expecting, and was a victory for Stanley Gold and Roy E. Disney, former board members who have called for his ouster.

Stockholders have said he has mismanaged the company and presided over a slump in profits.

Eisner is running for re-election unopposed, so his job was in no immediate danger. But shareholder dissatisfaction could lead to other steps, such as a separation of the chairman and CEO roles, both of which he currently holds, or possibly his ouster.

Disney executives noted that the company's stock has risen more than 40 percent in the past year.

Comcast Corp., the cable TV giant that last month made an unsolicited bid for Disney that was rejected, urged the Disney board to take a new look at the offer. GARY GENTILE (AP)

Suspect Shot in Robbery Attempt

Armed guard thwarts bank hit 2 blocks north of White House

WASHINGTON | A would-be robber was shot and wounded by an armored-car guard Wednesday at a bank two blocks north of the White House, police said.

A man armed with a shotgun followed the driver of a Dunbar Armored Car into a Chevy Chase Bank branch on 15th Street near I Street, police said. The armed man demanded the guard's bag of cash, but the guard shot the man in the leg.

A scuffle followed, spilling out onto the sidewalk, where the shotgun was lying hours after the incident.

Witness Maria Perez said she saw what happened from a park across the street. "People in the park hit the ground" at the sound of gunshots, Perez said.

The suspect, Daryl Carter, 42, of Northeast Washington, was taken to George Washington University Hospital with non-life-threatening wounds. Police said he would be charged with robbery. Other charges were pending. He was expected in court on Thursday.

Investigators were looking for a second man seen running from the area who may have been a lookout.

The armored-car guard was not injured. His name was not released.

Dwight Watson, seen here in a rendering during a Feb. 18 hearing, was supposed to be sentenced Wednesday. But the judge postponed the decision until June 23.

Judge Seeks Evaluation Of 'Tractor Man' Watson

WASHINGTON | It was supposed to be a sentencing hearing for the man who used a tractor and a bomb threat to disrupt the nation's capital just days before the invasion of Iraq.

But there was a sudden twist Wednesday, with the judge instead ordering Dwight Ware Watson — dubbed "Tractor Man" by Washington area commuters — to undergo a mental evaluation.

"I really would like to know more about Mr. Watson's mental condition," said U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson, during a brief hearing held on Wednesday.

Jackson ordered U.S. Marshals to take Watson to a federal prison hospital in Butner, N.C., for a 45-day psychological and psychiatric assessment.

"You will have your day in court, Mr. Watson," said Jackson, who rescheduled sentencing for June 23 pending his review of the findings. DERRILL HOLLY (AP)

'Pothole Killer' Rolls Out On Virginia's Highways

CHANTILLY, VA. | This is one killer you want roaming the streets.

Virginia Department of Transportation officials on Wednesday unveiled their newest weapon in the war on those nerve-jarring craters blighting the roads of the commonwealth. Dubbed the "Pothole Killer," it holds the promise of filling more than 100 holes per day with what VDOT promises is a quicker, better patch.

A crew working with shovels can manually fill 40 to 60 pot-holes a day.

In many ways it looks like a regular truck — but with one very obvious difference. An arm-like device sticks out some nine feet in front. And from it pours a hot asphalt mix, followed by dry rock.

VDOT has contracted with Patch Management, Inc., of Morrisville, Pa., to test the machine on northern Virginia roads for 600 hours, at a cost of $165 per hour which includes the driver, the materials and maintenance.

The company promises the machine can be operated day and night in any kind of weather, and works two days before the materials have to be refilled.

D.C. Mayor Wary of Va. Water Woes

WASHINGTON | Elevated lead levels found in the water of a few Virginia homes has created new concerns, District of Columbia Mayor Anthony A. Williams said Wednesday.

"The story that has come to light concerning high lead levels over in Arlington County is disturbing to me," said Williams. "Arlington receives its water from the same place we do."

D.C. and Arlington — as well as Falls Church, Va. — get water from the Washington Aqueduct, operated by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

Arlington County leaders said preliminary tests of tap water in eight homes showed five had elevated lead levels. School officials plan to test water samples from county schools beginning Thursday.

County spokesman Charles Taylor said the initial results were surprising because lead service lines weren't involved. (AP)

Capitals Continue Fire Sale

Gonchar sent to Boston for Morrisonn, picks

PRO HOCKEY | The Washington Capitals traded defenseman Sergei Gonchar to the Boston Bruins on Wednesday in the latest cost-cutting maneuver by the struggling team.

The Bruins dealt Shaone Morrisonn and first- and second-round selections in the 2004 draft for the 29-year-old Gonchar, Boston general manager Mike O'Connell announced.

Gonchar was leading the Capitals with 42 assists and 49 points in 56 games. He had four power-play goals and 11 multiple-point games. Morrisonn had one goal and six assists for Boston in 27 games this season.

Gonchar, the leading scorer among NHL defensemen this season, follows Steve Konowalchuk, Jaromir Jagr, Peter Bondra and league scoring leader Robert Lang out the door in Washington.

Capitals general manager George McPhee said he was only considering deals in which the Capitals would get a young defenseman in return.

The trade leaves Washington without a player with more than 27 points this season. McPhee said the moves give the Capitals a foundation of young, talented players.

Gonchar is in the final year of a contract that pays him $3.65 million this season. The native of Chelyabinsk, Russia, had spent his entire career with Washington after the Capitals selected him with the 14th pick in the 1992 draft. JAY LINDSAY (AP)

After being held out of the Capitals' past three games, defenseman Sergei Gonchar was traded to the Bruins. Gonchar was in the last year of his contract.

Champ Bailey will receive an $18 million signing bonus to play for the Denver Broncos, who sent running back Clinton Portis to Washington in a trade.

Bailey-for-Portis Trade Finally Becomes Reality

PRO FOOTBALL | The Champ Bailey deal with the Denver Broncos is done, assuring the Washington Redskins that Clinton Portis will join Mark Brunell, and free agents Phillip Daniels, Shawn Springs and Cornelius Griffin in Washington.

Bailey's agent, Jack Reale, said the deal was reached late Tuesday.

Bailey agreed to a seven-year, $63 million contract with the Broncos. The deal includes an $18 million signing bonus and $5 million in other bonuses, making it one of the richest contracts ever for a defensive player.

That cleared the way for the four-time Pro Bowl cornerback to be traded Wednesday to the Broncos for running back Portis, who ran for 1,500-plus yards each of his first two seasons. Denver also receives Washington's second-round draft pick this season.

League officials say the Portis-Bailey trade is the first involving two major players swapping teams since Oakland's Ken Stabler and Houston's Dan Pastorini changed cities on March 17, 1980.

Redskins Fill Needs On Defense

Springs, Griffin agree to contracts on first day of NFL free agency

PRO FOOTBALL | The Washington Redskins reached a contract agreement with free agent cornerback Shawn Springs on Wednesday, The Associated Press has learned.

On a busy first day of free agency, the Redskins also signed former New York Giants defensive tackle Cornelius Griffin, re-signed offensive lineman Lennie Friedman and welcomed running back Clinton Portis and quarterback Mark Brunell.

Portis and Brunell were acquired in previously announced trades that became official Wednesday.

Springs was being flown to Washington late Wednesday and was to sign his contract Thursday, said an NFL source who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Joe Gibbs welcomed Cornelius Griffin to the Redskins on Wednesday.

Tight end Walter Rasby also paid a visit and the team hoped to sign the free agent soon.

Springs will replace cornerback Champ Bailey, who is being traded to the Denver Broncos for Portis.

The news came so fast Wednesday that Brunell's introductory news conference was merely a sidelight.

Brunell, who signed a seven-year, $43 million contract, said he expects to start, but that Gibbs did not promise him the job. There are already rumblings of a possible quarterback controversy involving Brunell and incumbent Patrick Ramsey. JOSEPH WHITE (AP)

PRO BASKETBALL A Maryland Reunion in D.C.: Wizards Add Baxter to Mix

The Washington Wizards claimed forward Lonny Baxter off waivers from the Toronto Raptors on Wednesday. Baxter, released Sunday, was averaging 4.2 points and 3.1 rebounds this season with Chicago and Toronto. The addition of Baxter gives the Wizards three players from Maryland's 2002 NCAA championship team. He joins former Terrapins teammates Juan Dixon and Steve Blake. (AP)

PRO FOOTBALL Eagles Swoop In, Land Kears

The Philadelphia Eagles beat the Washington Redskins to the punch by signing three-time Pro Bowl defensive end Jevon Kearse to a $66 million, eight-year deal on Wednesday. Kearse will receive a $16 million signing bonus and a $4 million roster bonus. The deal makes Kearse the highest-paid defensive lineman in NFL history, according to Kearse's agent, Drew Rosenhaus. SOCCKER | The U.S. women's team qualified for the Athens Olympics, getting goals from four different players in a 4-0 victory Wednesday over Costa Rica.

Mexico also got an Olympic berth with a 2-1 victory over Canada to earn its first trip to the Olympics.

Abby Wambach scored a goal for the U.S. against Costa Rica on Wednesday.

PHANTOM LIMB: Baz, one of the patients with Body Integrity Identity Disorder in Melanie Gilbert's film, claims he feels "reborn" since freezing off one leg with dry ice.

All of Me

Subjects of 'Whole' want to lose a limb to find themselves

FILM | There were 19th-century men who were sexually obsessed with handkerchiefs. Got your attention now? Well get this: There are 21st-century people obsessed with amputation. On themselves. Now don't you miss the good old days?

The documentary, "Whole," directed by Melanie Gilbert and serving as one of the focal points for this weekend's D.C. Independent Film Festival, lets these people speak for themselves. This, in part, is because there's no one else to speak for them.

No major studies have analyzed the condition becoming known as Body Integrity Identity Disorder. Psychiatry offers no tailored therapy. Instead, there are a few surgeons who have consented to remove silly vestigial appendages — like legs and arms. So much for that Hippocratic Oath.

Even the wannabe amputees admit the whole thing is odd. But they claim that, like transvestites and transsexuals, they only feel fully themselves after surgery. It's the way they admit it — with charm, candor and articulate likability — that makes the film more than a freak show. They're baffled, and so we feel for their predicament. Sort of.

The clinicians are the ones who come off as freaks here. One pair sponsors meetings of wannabes with the aim to "facilitate treatment." Meaning surgical treatment, not psychiatric — has the possibility of alternative treatments never occurred to health professionals? They express full certainty that amputation is the

airplane drawings
are comin' atcha

GALLERIES | Size does matter, fly-boy. That's the lesson to be learned from "Jay Stuckey: Airplanes," now on view at Strand on Volta.

Virtually every guy who grew up on "Thirty Seconds over Tokyo" (the movie, not the song) and "Baa Baa Black Sheep" (the TV series, not the nursery rhyme) made crude but exuberant drawings where gnat-like clouds of prop-engine fighters faced off in mammoth dogfights or harassed a hulking bomber as it lumbered back to base.

But there's little chance your World War II fantasies were executed on the scale of Stuckey's "Orange Airplanes" (68 inches by 162 inches). And your scratchings probably didn't come close to achieving the density of the D.C.-raised painter's "Green Swarm," which makes a savagely gleeful joke about the "allover" compositions of Jackson Pollock.

ORANGE CRUSH: Jay Stuckey's large-scaled, self-consciously boyish airplane drawings are naive yet genuinely menacing.

Another advantage of size? Well, if Stuckey's paintings had been kid-scale, we wouldn't have been able to cup our hands around our eyes and peer at them through the window — the lights forlornly cycling off and on, off and on — when Strand wasn't open during its advertised hours.

In other words, call ahead, and if you don't get a voice on the line, have the navigator chart a course for home. GLENN DIXON

Stand up for the spreadable beauty
that is Clay and Kelly

MUSIC | Clay Aiken and Kelly Clarkson are headlining a tour that lands in D.C. this weekend for a couple of hours of heart-swelling, soul-lifting, grin-inducing musical pleasure. Are you big enough to go?

Be fair: We're not asking you to attach electrodes to your head for some fiendish experiment, or to say nasty things about your mama or even to look sternly at a kitten.

Look inside yourself and find that spot that soars when the high notes are sung, that weeps a little during the sad songs, that throws back its head — yes, all right, the head of the part of you inside yourself; just work with us — and goes,

The measure of a man is clearly bespoke, judging from Clay's fine suit.

girl! Kelly can rock the tigress thing and be your babe next door, while Clay's the clean-living Southern boy with a secretly yearning soul, and both of them are more expressive, nuanced and powerful vocally than their aiming-to-please personas would indicate.

The songs? We can't really vouch for the alternative progressiveness of "A Moment Like This" or "This Is the Night," which are, technically, two different songs. In case you were wondering.

But the work on both Clarkson and Aiken's records ("Measure of a Man" — tee-hee — and "Thankful," respectively) is pleasant, pretty, somewhat versatile and occasionally fiesty. It's how their stupendous voices and charming stage presence transmute the songs that make this bill (with up-and-coming pop chickies The Beu Sisters) so worthy.

All we are saying is give cheese a chance. (EXPRESS)

An artist assembles her fragmented identity

MUSEUMS | "My mother was born in Paris to Polish Jewish parents who settled in France just before World War Two," writes photographer Muriel Hasbun in the brochure to "Memento," her show that opens at the Corcoran on Saturday.

"My father was born in El Salvador to Palestinian Christian parents who settled in Central America shortly before World War I. I was born and raised in San Salvador and now live in Washington, DC."

Building on work she showed at last year's Venice Biennale, "Memento" consists of several black-and-white suites in which she goes in search of her identity, parts of which exist more as family story than as felt experience.

The techniques she employs to evoke reconstituted memory — overlaying multiple image fragments, printing negative images, mounting on distressed surfaces, solarization — are rather obvious. And the imagery itself, mined from heirloom pictures and photographic records of trips on which she sought out her heritage, doesn't always mean as much to the viewer as it does to the artist.

But the ideas she's grappling with — self-tourism and the desire to reassemble the memories of others into a personal creation narrative — still resonate. GLENN DIXON

MOTHER'S GONE MISSING: Kelly Hutchinson and Usef Bulos performing "Homebody/Kabul" in the New York Theatre Workshop. The play is now in D.C.

Missus in a Burka

A British housewife looks for romanticism in unforgiving places

STAGE | An educated Afghan woman, fed up during the era of American support for the Taliban, screams at a Westerner: "You love the Taliban so much, bring them to New York! Well don't worry, they're coming to New York! Americans!"

Recent history? No, the most eerily prescient line of Tony Kushner's "Homebody/Kabul." The play, written before 9/11, opened in New York shortly after the disaster, to no small controversy.

Tony Kushner, however, eats controversy for breakfast. How else would a gay, Jewish socialist become a celebrated playwright? His ambitious recipe of AIDS, Reagan-era politics, millennial fever and Mormonism resulted in a Pulitzer Prize for "Angels in America." The seven-hour, two-part Broadway epic was recently broadcast as an HBO production starring Al Pacino, Meryl Streep and Emma Thompson.

Now "Homebody/Kabul" comes to the District in a co-production from Woolly Mammoth and Theatre J. The homebody of the title is a middle-aged British woman infatuated with ancient stories and travelogues from Afghanistan. She imagines herself speaking fluent Pashto and romancing an Afghan merchant.

Kabul is where her hapless husband and misfit daughter find themselves after she disappears.

The reports suggest their former homebody has died, or maybe taken the veil and married a Muslim man. As the westerners negotiate the distant, difficult yet beautiful country, they encounter opium, the grave of Cain and the mad librarian who wishes the Taliban upon America. Their lost loved one won't be so easily found.

Kushner's restless imagination anticipated the turn the larger American imagination would take beginning in late 2001. Judging from Kushner's previous output, the "Taliban" the playwright imagines for America would likely prefer power ties and the New Testament over turbans and the Quran.

Then again, to be a playwright is to be, at some level, a romantic. And Kushner acknowledges the romantic impulse that might lead a spiritually parched woman to renounce her beloved books and Sinatra songs for an austere, obscure and possibly more fulfilling calling. BOB MASSEY

DANCE | The New York City Ballet is legend among dance aficionados who haven't been able to see the troupe at its home base.

Anyone who takes in a lot of the squishier, more crowd-pleasing ballets on the market will be stunned by the troupe's clarity and asceticism. The seven works by the company's founder and greatest choreographer, George Balanchine, the NYCB is bringing to the Kennedy Center to celebrate the maestro's centennial are exemplary symbols of his mid-century modernism.

Dances to look out for this weekend are the radiant 'Apollo'; the sexy, bedeviling "Prodigal Son";

the glorious pure dance work "Symphony in C," roiling with the froth of four principal ballerinas and the music of Bizet; the four-part "Jewels," flashing fire with all the plangency of gems come to life; and "Serenade," perhaps Mr. B's crowning glory.

Plotless, gauzy as a dried dandelion, "Serenade" piles up its female corps in alluring bunches and spreads it out in pleasing lines. Designed as an exercise for Mr. B's gauche dancers-in-training, it's somehow both earthy and transcendent.

It's been 17 years since the NYCB has visited D.C. For lovers of the dance, every opportunity to see the troupe is a once-in-a-lifetime chance. (EXPRESS)

THAI TANIC

(1326 14th St. NW; 202-588-1186) — In a town filled with theatrical Thai decors, Thai Tanic's is no less cinematic — retro-kitsch sparkly red vinyl chairs, swirly metallic tables, underwater murals — but it's a fine stage for unexpectedly good food. Check out the lemon grassy steamed mussels, particularly good yum nua (spicy beef salad) and yum ped yang (roast duck salad with ginger and lime-chili sauce); seafood ka pow stir-fries; the almost Texas-style sliced-beef nua kating; and green or red curries. Entrees $8.95-$12.95. EVE ZIBART

that means steaming and braising and roasting, dinner may take a little time, and sometimes Larbi Bouaichi seems to have all his pans in the air at one time, so to speak, but the wait is worth it: just-gamy-enough pâté, beautifully distinct semolina couscous, melting osso buco, delicate lamb tagine, flaky phyllo bastillas and a half-dozen duck treatments, plus a long list of French, Italian and mid-Atlantic continental surf 'n' turf. Be sure to get the prices on the "unlisted" wines, and watch for unusual soups. Entrees $16-$29. EVE ZIBART

Eve Zibart's dining reviews appear every Friday in The Washington Post's Weekend section. This week she visits Tenleytown's Neisha Thai and Taipei Tokyo in Rockville.

Fangs for Visiting

REALITY BITES | Proof that people will do anything to show up on television can be found on “Mad Mad House” (8 p.m., Sci Fi). This latest variation on “The Real World” is set in a mansion where the five hosts represent “alternative” lifestyles.

Don claims to be a vampire. Fiona is a self-proclaimed witch. Iya Ta'Shia is a voodoo priestess. Art calls himself a “modern primitive.” The primitive part involves poking yourself with spikes and covering your body in tattoos; the modern part allows Art to wear sunglasses. Finally, meet Avocado, the “naturalist.” He eats only raw food and walks around naked.

Their guests have absolutely no clue about what awaits them. In typical “reality” fashion, they’re a mix of exhibitionists, including a self-proclaimed Republican virgin who lives in a convent; a “retired” stripper; a writer who makes his living as a janitor in a barber shop; a handsome guy who “wishes everyone was Christian”; a self-described “player”; two former beauty queens; a frat boy; and a horse trainer who claims to be smarter than he sounds.

Kudos to Don the vampire for not changing his name to “Shroudwayne.”

Each week, the freaky five will vote off one contestant. Those who fail to conform to their new surroundings and their hosts’ proclivities will get the boot. This raises some interesting, and even troubling questions.

In the pilot episode, several players decline to participate in a voodoo ritual. Others express reservations about the potential for danger in dabbling in dark practices. How about a “reality show” called “Christian House,” where guests were praised or voted off because of their willingness to receive communion, praise the Lord, accept Jesus, etc. Can you imagine the controversy? ON TV TONIGHT

GHOULISH TV

PRINCESS DIANA: THE SECRET TAPES (10 p.m., NBC) features never-before-seen film clips and audio interviews with the late Princess of Wales. A second segment will air next week.

Diana

While I have no idea why folks will tune in to hear a 12-year-old interview with a woman who has been dead for six-and a half years, I know this marks a new decline in the fortunes of NBC’s “Must-See-TV” lineup. First “The Apprentice” replaces two sitcoms, and now “ER” takes a two-week sabbatical to be replaced by material better suited to “Dateline.” And they wonder why network audience shares continue to decline.

FAMILY BUSINESSMEN: Michael Imperioli, James Gandolfini, Tony Sirico and Steven Van Zandt line up for yet more agita.

Back With More Bang

‘The Sopranos’ gets the shake-up it needed

TELEVISION | “The Sopranos” is back, and all is wrong with the world.

The TV drama every other drama series is measured against is returning to face the ultimate challenge: getting measured against its own past.

And it measures up — especially after last season, which didn’t.

Last season, “The Sopranos” was gripped by tension. Week after week, the pressure built. As if resigned to inevitable doom, mobster Tony Soprano and everyone around him — and the series — sank into a funk.

Now, as “The Sopranos” begins its fifth season Sunday at 9 p.m. on HBO, it seems headed on a different, more rewarding track.

Warning: Spoilers ahead.

Tony (James Gandolfini), his wife (Edie Falco), and other key characters have lost their bearings. Too much has changed, too much is uncertain. One cause of shattered equilibrium is the arrival of several new mobsters who, jailed during the crackdown on organized crime in the 1980s, are out.

It isn’t long before former mob boss Feech La Manna (Robert Loggia) is telling Tony, “Now that I’m out, I’d like to get back in the game.”

Also back on the streets is a cousin, Tony Blundetto (played by Steve Buscemi), whom Soprano wants back in the family business.

No thanks, says “Tony B.” Once a rising star in the mob, he now intends to go straight.

The life of Tony’s nephew Christopher (Michael Imperioli) hangs in the balance: He’s kicked booze and drugs. But how long can he hold out? And Christopher’s fiancée Adriana (Drea de Matteo) remains conflicted as she’s forced to inform on Christopher and the rest of the mob. How long can she reconcile her two lives?

Sunday’s episode begins with the familiar newspaper in the Soprano driveway. But Tony isn’t fetching it.

Later, the series adds to its gallery of odd and powerful images with a glimpse of raw potential violence, all the more unexpected for its having no connection with organized crime.

No wonder Tony — who now bunks in his late mother’s shabby house — drifts back home on any pretext. There he scraps with Carmela, barks at sullen son A.J. (Robert Iler), chugs orange juice out of the carton and pretends none of the fault is his.

It’s all part of a scramble for some sense of normality. Happily for viewers, the search on “The Sopranos” this season could come with many new pitfalls. FRAZIER MOORE (AP)

Vulnerable
Tough Guys

WHACKED | Johnny Sack, don’t make any long-term plans.

That’s the opinion of an online bookmaker, BetWWTS.com, which issued odds Wednesday on which character would be the first to be whacked or die during the upcoming season of HBO’s “The Sopranos.”

The bookmaker issued 3-1 odds that Sack, a rival mob boss to Tony Soprano, would be the first to make an untimely exit. That means bettors have to put up $1 to win $3.

Sack’s associate, Little Carmine, is listed at 7-2 odds and Christopher Moltisanti’s informant wife, Adriana, is at 4-1 odds.

The company first issued odds last season and pinpointed Ralph Cifaretto, who wound up having his head stuffed into a bowling bag.

The safest bet? It helps to be the star of the series; Tony Soprano is listed at 60-1 odds. (AP)

GESTURES

Why? Because We Hate Ya!

The Walt Disney Co. has quietly shelved a life-size statue of Mickey Mouse inspired by singer JANET JACKSON. The 6-foot, 700-pound statue was one of 75 unveiled at Walt Disney World in Orlando last fall. The statues were inspired by celebrities such as Andre Agassi, Jamie Lee Curtis and Ellen DeGeneres. The statue inspired by Jackson was clad in a tight black outfit similar to one she wore in 1990 after the release of her album, Rhythm Nation 1814. It was replaced by a spare statue by an in-house Disney artist. (AP)

PRINCES

Giving Trees

Britain's PRINCE HARRY, seeking attention Wednesday for parentless children with AIDS, planted a peach tree at an orphanage in Lesotho. Holding the hand of 4-year-old MUTSU POTSAKE, the prince walked to a flower bed at the Mants'ase Children's Home where he planted the fruit tree. Mutsu helped the prince fill the hole. (AP)

OVEREXPOSURE

Charlize Jumps the Shark

Oscar-winner CHARLIZE THERON will have a semi-precious blue-green stone named for her, reported Agence France Presse. The South African discoverer of a new variety of amazonite has decided to name his find the "Star of Charlize." (EXPRESS)

FIRST LADIES

Doing Her Civic Duty

Journalist-turned-California first lady MARIA SHRIVER has another new job: juror. Shriver, wearing a pantsuit and reading glasses, took notes in U.S. District Court in Los Angeles on Wednesday, where she is on a jury hearing a product liability case. She is one of three women on the panel hearing the case of a man who claims he suffered nerve damage that cost him the use of his right arm when he fell from an extension ladder while working for a heating and cooling company. (AP)

Elle MacPherson is awfully freckly, don't you think? And so pale. Blech.

MODELS

The 'M' Word

An ad for supermodel ELLE MACPHERSON's lingerie line has been banned in Britain after regulators received a complaint from the public that the model in the ad appeared to be masturbating. The Advertising Standards Authority said Wednesday it had ruled that the ad by Bendon UK Ltd. was offensive and could not be repeated. The complaint was about an ad in Vogue showing a model wearing a bra and panties with her thumbs hooked inside the panties, viewed as if through a keyhole. Bendon UK said the ad was inspired by Alfred Hitchcock's "Rear Window," showing a moment that was "feminine, luxurious and stylized." (AP)

"OMG, it's Sam Waterson! He's tall!"

CASTING

Ripped From the Headlines

New York Mayor MICHAEL BLOOMBERG is playing himself in an episode of NBC's "Law & Order." Bloomberg taped two scenes inside City Hall on Wednesday, in which he hosted a pair of news conferences discussing the murder of an assistant district attorney. (AP)

Stop, just stop, looking up "John, Elton" on weddings.com. He's not registered.

STATEMENTS

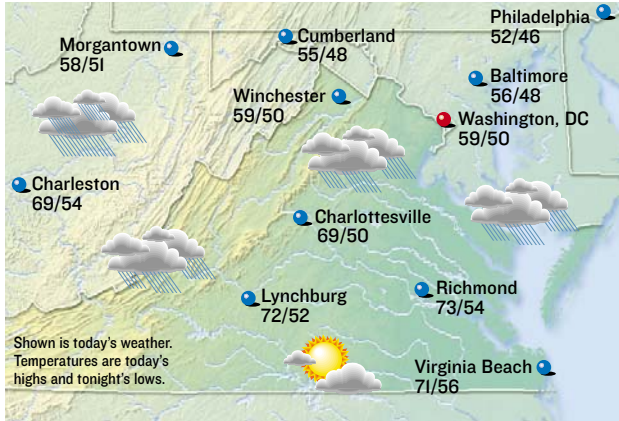

Better Take Back That Leopard-Print Breadmaker

ELTON JOHN said Wednesday that while he supports same-sex marriage, reports are untrue that he plans to wed partner DAVID FURNISH. "David and I ... have no plans to get married," John said in a statement. Last week, Rosie O'Donnell and Kelli Carpenter became the most high-profile gay couple to marry in San Francisco. (AP)

Letters

TO THE EDITOR

IN THE MARCH 3 "Live Online" excerpt, CNN's Tucker Carlson said, regarding the impact of young voters in the 2004 election, that he is "... just as happy to let people who read a daily newspaper choose [his] government." To imply young people are uninformed in the political arena — particularly to a Washington-based newspaper — is ignorant and a generalization that only contributes to voter apathy.

It's unfortunate that a CNN analyst doesn't realize most young voters look to broadcast media for campaign information. A recent Pew Research Center survey found cable network news most frequently cited by young people as a source of election news. The network has lost my vote. We can make a difference.

LET'S PUT IN PERSPECTIVE the discovery that water existed on Mars (A Watery Home for Mars Life, March 3). Researchers have identified numerous requirements, independent of water, for life to exist on any given planet in any given planetary system. Kudos to NASA, but let's not confuse science fiction with science fact just yet.

Horoscope | Stella Wilder

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — What you call overwork may be unavoidable — but it can prove worthwhile by day's end.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — You may not be able to work or play closely with a good friend, simply because your internal rhythms are so wildly out of sync.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Don't jump to conclusions, or assume that others will accept or support your own extreme views. Try a moderate approach.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — You'll be drawn toward a stranger who exhibits qualities you secretly admire. A partnership, if not a friendship, is certainly possible.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — This is a good day to make or break a few habits — depending, of course, on how you look at it. You can provide something important for others.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You can enjoy your exposure to something new and unusual. Keep your wits about you, however; you'll be called upon to use them.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — You cannot afford to overdo it, but neither must you limit yourself too severely. Move ahead rapidly until your instincts tell you otherwise.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — You may receive a calling of sorts, and flirt with the idea of changing course mid-stream. Of course, you must be more realistic.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — You're in no mood to be the life of the party, or even to take the lead in anything work- or recreation-related.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — It's important that you do what you can to improve relations between your side and theirs. Be an ambassador of goodwill.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Lies are to be avoided at all costs — and you must be sure that others try to live up to your own strict standards.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Trust your intuitions and you will profit mightily. Love blossoms despite your reluctance; are you ready to make a new commitment?

Halliburton

From washingtonpost.com/liveonline

DAVE LESAR, chairman and CEO of Halliburton Co., the government's biggest contracting firm in Iraq, was online Wednesday to discuss allegations and scrutiny of the corporation.

What was the motivation behind the new ads for Halliburton? They look and run like political ads.

We are clearing up the record. As our ad says, we want people to understand that we got our business based on the abilities of our employees to deliver quality services. We are very good at what we do and have served both Democratic and Republican administrations for more than 60 years.

Why wasn't there competitive bidding for the multibillion-dollar contract Halliburton was awarded for work in Iraq? It just smells bad.

The fact is the original contract, Logcap III, was competitively bid in 2001 and Halliburton won the contract. Later, one of the tasks received under this contract included the preparation of an emergency plan to restore Iraq's oil infrastructure. This work was always going to be competitively re-bid. It has been and Halliburton was awarded one of the follow-on contracts.

Are you saying the government was soliciting bids for a war in Iraq in 2001?

No, we won this contract to support the troops in 2001. It included troop support requirements whenever the military might deploy in the future. Currently, we are doing similar support work in the Balkans, Afghanistan and a number of other countries. This is a contingency contract and included no specific location when we bid it.

Have you lost any employees' lives?

We have lost employees while working in the war zone. These tragedies have occurred mainly in the fuel and mail delivery mission. Make no mistake about it, this is not working in a resort area. It is a difficult and dangerous environment.
